Lots of things keep happening. I remember a motorcyclist. I was standing in front of the chalet, watching him. I wanted to see when he would get bored. He was climbing up the steep hillside for the fourth time, and, as soon as he had reached the hilltop, he would turn his motorcycle and go down smoothly, noiselessly, into the valley. The fifth time, it was inevitable, it happened; the accident, I mean. I carried him to the chalet, full of blood, unconscious. I sprinkled him with water. He awakened and, to my astonishment, he recognized me. "I thought you weren't coming any more," he told me. "I waited for you last year, as well, at about the same time as now." I could hardly understand. "I think you must be mistaking me for somebody else," I told him. "This chalet isn't mine. A friend has lent it to me for a week." He smiled. "I know this is the rule of the game: you must pretend you don't know me. But it's me, Emanuel."
